Slovenian band Laibach rock out to Sound of Music in North Korea

The Slovenian band Laibach performed in North Korea in late 2021 as part of a cultural exchange program between the two nations. The band's performance was a unique blend of classical music and modern art, which included a rendition of the famous song from the Sound of Music.

The performance took place in front of a live audience of 1,000 people, and it was a significant event in the cultural relations between Slovenia and North Korea. The band's performance was well-received, and it helped to strengthen the ties between the two countries.

Laibach has a long history of creating art that challenges the status quo, and their performance in North Korea was no exception. The band's use of classical music and modern art techniques created a unique and powerful experience for the audience.

In addition to the musical performance, Laibach also engaged in workshops with local artists, sharing their knowledge and expertise in the field of music and art.

Overall, the Laibach performance in North Korea was a significant cultural exchange that helped to bridge the gap between the two nations and promote understanding and cooperation.
